

CHAMBERMAID'S TRUNK H'D JEWELS WORTH $10,000

Miss Elizabeth Chalmers, off Duty, Dazzled Theatres
and Restaurants.

DEMURE BEFORE GUESTS

Got Her Wardrobe at the Narragansett and Imperial Hotels.

The Hotel Narragansett, at No. 208 Broadway, likes its servants to be neat and well dressed, but when Elizabeth Chalmers, one of the chambermaids, blossomed out two weeks ago in a rose colored Directoire gown, gray suede shoes and silk stockings, and a hat with what looked like the year's product of an ostrich farm blooming and waving on it, not to speak of jewelry, with which she glittered like an election parade, the management experienced a mild wonderment as to where she got it.

A watch was placed upon the movements of Miss Chalmers and hotel detectives trailed her every night. They saw her get into taxicabs and ride down to the theatre district. Their chase led them into theatres and restaurants where Miss Chalmers was escorted by a young man as well dressed as herself.
At ordering Miss Chalmers was a wonder said the detectives and the check didn't seem to bother her exactly a bit. When it came Miss Chalmers just slipped him something that definitely was a roll of money while the waiter was clearing the bill before respecting it with a flourish. Then back to the hotel came Elizabeth, the same respectful maid with downcast eyes and neek manner till another sunset brought her release from her toll.

Mrs. Gurshee's Lost Jewels.
A few days ago Mrs. Edward Gurshee, who is a guest at the hotel, lost some jewels worth about $25. She worried about it a good deal and she spoke to Elizabeth, who "did" her room, about it.
Elizabeth's great hazel eyes opened wide when she heard of Mrs. Gurshee's loss.

"Oh, ma'am, who could have done it?" she asked.
Mrs. Gurshee couldn't help it. She confessed that for a fleeting moment she had thought it might have been Elizabeth. But she thought, said Mrs. Gurshee, as Elizabeth's expressive eyes filled with tears as large as the pearls in Mrs. Gurshee's missing bracelet.

The hotel people, however, thought of Elizabeth's wonderful finery and summoned Detective-Liam. Conroy went to the young woman's room last night while she was at the theatre and broke open her trunk. What he found there would have stocked a small jewelry store and had the makings of a presentation case and a fine wardrobe. All the stuff in the trunk was the young girl's trunk was worth $10,000 and much of it was recognized as having been missed from rooms of the Narragansett during Elizabeth's month of service there. The visits of Elizabeth had been profitable.

Then She Confessed.
When Elizabeth entered her room after midnight with a swish of her silk skirts, her tall, hipless corset-form swayed as she saw the detectives end the open trunk. Then she broke down and told it all. She said she had heard at the Imperial before she came to the Narragansett, and a "banned inquiry revealed that Elizabeth had taken much fine jewelry and jewelry while she was working there.

In the West Side Court today the young woman's story was heard. She was draped in what the fashion writers call an exquisite creation of blue something or other that the lady prosecution officer said must have cost at least $50, but Elizabeth's little shawl nose was red and so were her eyes from weeping.
Magistrate Siebert held her in $100 bail for further examination to-morrow when the detective promised to have more evidence against her than the robbery of Mrs. Gurshee. "They want to find the exact lot as they think he may know something about the wherewithal that paid for the theatres and little suppers."

Monthly

We pay a premium.
We give no commission.
These "premiums" and "discounts" and "commissions" we put into your pocket. The proof is before you. It is illustrated in the PIERCE Player-piano at $485, which is equal in every respect to player-pianos offered elsewhere for $700.

The Pierce may be played by hand in the usual way, or put in a music roll, (touch a treadle and spring and press)—the treadles unfold and the self-player is at your command, with all its marvelous powers.
The PIERCE will exactly meet the needs of those who wish a truly good playerpiano at an extremely modest price. Look around—investigate—compare. Satisfy yourself that the
